JACKSON GRUSE

Attorney

Jackson Gruse brings experience across state, federal, and international legal settings. Holding both a law degree and a Master of Business Administration, he understands how business and law intersect, which makes him a valuable asset in business litigation.

During law school, Jackson externed for Judge Blackwell and Magistrate Judge Cowan Wright, gaining firsthand experience in federal court practice and persuasive advocacy. He also worked for the Minnesota Office of the Secretary of State, where he saw how business and government interact at the state level. After his second year, he interned at a British law firm in Frankfurt, Germany, working on international commercial disputes, and he studied conflict resolution at Hebrew University - Jerusalem.

Jackson honed his writing as an associate on the Mitchell Hamline Law Review and built his practical skills as a law clerk at Anthony Ostlund. He draws on both his legal and business training to help clients navigate complex disputes.
